The Iguazu Falls are one of the most impressive waterfalls in the world; the subtropical forest of Mata Atlantica surrounds them. The access point to the National Park has a walk of approximately 1km in which you'll pass by through gazebos, bridges, and elevations that are great for taking photos.

Along the way wild animals like the Quati can be seen, as well as some birds and butterflies that give a special colorful touch to the park.

After this visit, you'll continue to the Bird Park, which is a zoo that possesses more than 900 birds from approximately 130 exotic species, from which some are endangered. At the park's aviary visitors have a chance to get closer look of the birds.

Once you've had the chance to see the waterfalls on the Brazilian side, you'll proceed to the Argentinian side to appreciate the waterfalls from a different perspective.

On the Argentinian side of the Park you'll take a ride on a train and head to the different trail circuits. Some of the circuits are more than 2km long, some are located on the edge of the waterfalls, and others cut into the Atlantic Forest. Here you'll find ideal places to relax and get wonderful pictures.
